Ive installed remote starters before, but never with the starter kill relay relay. I have a carvox cx990. When i first wired it, it worked fine except that i got a grinding noise from the starter. So i researched to see what my problems could be. Some say the might be a sensor on the starter kill relay. I wired everything which includes tach wire, constant twelve volts, starter, and ignition wires. So i wired the started kill relay but im kind of lost.I have a 99 mitsubishi galant.I also wired the orange wire orange to the alarm output to create a ground or what not.Because i have 2 ignition wires pinks hanging that are not wired right now.Can someone send me their setup for a carvox 990 if anyone has installed these before.But i need some strong help. I think the started Unit is really messed up. I have to wire the starter backwards on two wires for it to start the car.<http://flyb787.com/userfiles/boston-acoustics-subsat-6-manual.xml>

Let me explain, car wires Yellow and black starter Blue and red constant 12v Black and white ignition Starter Unit Red constant 12v purple starter 2 pink wires ignition orange accessory Ive tried wiring the starter to the corresponding wire on the car but nothing happens, the engine wont even turn. But if i wire the purple to the white and black car ignition and pink to yellow and black car starter it turns and everything. Its basically running th starter when the starter is supposed to turn of once the car is on. So yes there is that grinding noise. I tried wiring the kill switch but still nothing. The brain knows its on since it shows the animation of exhaaust coming out the car. But this is how i wired the kill switch. 30 motor side 87a key side both green wires, but i also wire the starter unit ignition with a butt connector to the 30 to the starter on the car the starter is cut in half. Can someone explain to me exactly what im doing wrong at this point or is it the unit. This topic is closed. Any user assumes the entire risk as to the accuracy and use of this information. Please.
